Every CV reads the same now. Your email can't.

borrowed your launch line, hope you don't mind ↙

A three-email sequence for the RoundOne team.

Hey Mayur,

You said at launch that tomorrow's recruiters will need more than just resume screening tools. I think that's also the best cold email you haven't sent yet.

3 emails. 1 small ask each.

Picture a Head of Resourcing on a Tuesday. A new site just went live on Indeed, applications are stacking up, and three more emails promise "AI that finds the best candidates". They all sound like the CVs she's tired of reading. The pitch that lands isn't AI screening. It's "hear them before you call them".

So I wrote the three emails I'd send for you, and why each one is built the way it is.

Ayush
Founder, Animohub Studio

What's inside

3 emails, 7 days
Day 0, day 3 and day 7, all in one thread.

Opens on a new site
A contact centre that just announced a new location.

Heads of Resourcing
At UK contact centres and BPOs hiring at volume.

Not every contact centre. The ones opening a site this month.

the week they need you most

The buyer is the person who owns hiring at a UK contact centre or BPO: Head of Resourcing, Recruitment Manager, sometimes the Ops Director. They feel it most the week a new site goes live.

What they'd say, in their own words

Drowning at go-live	One new site, hundreds of applications, and a recruiting team that didn't grow with it.
Every CV looks the same	Half of them are written by ChatGPT now, so a CV tells them less every month.
Phone screens eat the week	Recruiter hours burned on calls before there's any real evidence about a candidate.

Who goes on the list this week

A new site announced
Local press or job posts naming a new location.

Sponsored jobs on Indeed
Paying for applicant volume they then have to screen.

Hiring a volume recruiter
Screening is the bottleneck right now.

20+ agent roles open
Their own careers page says how big the pile is.

What each email does

Email 1 · Day 0

Open on the site
Name the new site, the CV problem, and offer a 2-minute sample screen.

Email 2 · Day 3

The phone-voice angle
A CV can't show how someone sounds. Your 88% and the free trial.

Email 3 · Day 7

A polite last note
See one voice screen next to a CV. A one-word reply.

happy to help you get it

One thing worth fixing

All your proof is self-reported right now. One named contact centre with a before and after on time-to-shortlist would do more work in email 2 than the 88% does.

The three emails.

Written as you, to a sample buyer. Highlighted parts change for every lead.

Email 1 · Day 0 — to a sample buyer (illustrative)

Subject: sunderland hiring

Hi Priya,

Saw Northgate is opening the Sunderland site in March.

That usually means hundreds of applications in a few weeks, and most CVs read the same now because half of them were written by ChatGPT.

We give every applicant a short structured voice screen, so your team reviews how people actually talk and think, not how well their CV was polished.

Worth sending you a 2-minute sample screen for a customer service role?

Mayur

Why it works: it opens on their news, names the pain in their words, and asks for something tiny and free.

Email 2 · Day 3, same thread — illustrative

Priya, one thing I left out.

Contact centre hiring is about how someone sounds on the phone. A CV can't show that. A voice screen can, before anyone on your team picks up.

Every candidate gets the same conversation, a summary and a score. In our testing those scores matched expert assessors 88% of the time.

Happy to set up a free 14-day trial on one Sunderland role.

Mayur

Why it works: a new angle only a contact centre cares about, your own proof, and a next step with no risk.

Email 3 · Day 7, same thread — illustrative

Last note from me, Priya.

If Sunderland is going the agency route, no problem at all. If your team is phone screening it in house, it might help to see one candidate's voice screen next to their CV.

Reply "sample" and I'll send one over.

Mayur

Why it works: an easy exit that still offers the clearest proof you have, for a one-word reply.

Per lead, your list needs: first name, company, the new site's town and opening month, and the role being hired. Priya and Northgate are made up.

Now picture it running.

A few weeks in, replies start with "send the sample" and end with a demo on your calendar.

30,000

Cold emails

To 15,000 buyers, two each on average.

4

Signals, 4 campaigns

New sites, Indeed spend, recruiter hires, open roles.

0

Risk to roundone.ai

Separate domains, warmed and rotated.

40 qualified demos in the next 50 days. Guaranteed.

We write down what "qualified" means first: your definition, not ours. Even one short, and the next month's campaign runs at higher volume, free.

Days 1–14: build
Lists, inboxes, copy you approve

Days 15–24: test
Small batches per signal, learn fast

Days 25–50: scale
More of whatever's working

Book a 30-minute call.

Pick a time
Whatever suits you

30 min on Google Meet
No slides, promise

Leave with the campaign
Yours to keep

Book your growth call →

On the call: the full campaign, the variants we'd test against this one, plus 25 real contact centres showing a signal this week.
cal.com/animo-hub-xcswxx/quick-strategy-call

Outbound systems for 23+ B2B AI and SaaS companies. Rise Labs added $8K in new MRR in two months. Levare Digital signed 13 clients.

P.S. Right now a resourcing lead is on her fourth phone screen of the morning, and the candidate sounds nothing like his CV. She's never heard of RoundOne. Let's go tell her.